In this series of four sessions, we will renew ourselves as leaders on the frontlines of transformation for gender equality. We will explore and learn practices to create interconnected leadership that aligns self, community and movements to create sustainable change. Sessions will build on one another and give us the opportunity to explore how we can co-create a new paradigm based on care and well-being for all people and the planet. The sessions are facilitated by Mallika Dutt.

Monday, 23 March: Presence and Connection
The first session focused on practical tools for mindfulness and centering to create a grounded presence to navigate our uncertain and volatile times. More than 170 people joined the session. You can watch the session here.

Monday, 20 April: Deep listening and creative collaboration
This session will focus on how we can listen deeply to ourselves, one another and the broader environment. As the world changes radically, learning to listen in more embodied and holistic ways can create opportunities for collaboration and new possibilities.

Monday, 4 May: Generative conflict
This session will explore how our differences and multiple points of view can be shared to generate more possibilities and build deeper connection across our diverse identities. Practices will explore moving beyond fight/flight/freeze responses to conflict and listening for differences with curiosity and engagement to build deeper relationships across movements.

Monday, 18 May: Building a culture of care and well-being for people and planet
This session will focus on the shifts that we can make at the individual and organizational level to build a culture of care that addresses shocks around health, resources, and safety and security issues. We will also explore how self-awareness and organizational change can incorporate planetary well-being as a critical part of our emergence into an interconnected paradigm.
