

Dr. Korazim is the Academic Director of Distance Learning programs at the Jewish Agency for Israel (JAFI) Department of Education. She was born in Israel, served in the Israel Defense Force (IDF) as an officer in the central training base for women, and later, was a member of the IDF delegation to Niger (West Africa). She is a graduate of Haifa University.

Dr. Korazim has a vast experience in Jewish education both in Israel and the Diaspora. As one of the founders and directors of a special program for soldiers from disadvantaged background, she was responsible for creating the educational framework and training teachers for the implementation of the program.

Since her first Shlichut (emissary visit) to Canada, where she was the head of JAFI delegation (from 1985 to 1988), she has been involved with Jewish education in the Diaspora; creating and implementing in-service training programs for educators, writing educational materials, counseling and teaching. Rachel works with Jewish educators from communities throughout the US, Canada, Latin America and Europe. In the last ten years she has invested a lot of her time and energy in helping the emerging Jewish schools of Hungary.
